A window may have an arbitrary (but unique) name. More than one application can have a window with the same name. To identify a window by name, you need to pass a name to the GetWindowLong function. The default value returned by the GetWindowLong function is zero, and any non-zero value returned indicates that the window has some specified attribute that was requested. To view this attribute you need to call GetWindowLong with the GWL_STYLE constant (defined in the header file). To identify a window with the name "My Window" you can use the following: If (GetWindowLong(MyWindow, GWL_STYLE) & WS_VISIBLE) = FALSE Then MsgBox "My Window is currently not visible." Else MsgBox "My Window is visible." End If 'GetWindowText' GetWindowText has many uses. It may be used to get the caption b7e8fdf5c8

"A Better Switchboard is a collection of over 40 menu styles, 10 switchboard popups, and 8 new bookmarklets! Each of these improvements is not only accessible, but easy to use. The new switchboards can be used in multiple ways. For example, the switchboard menus function like a drop down menu on a web page. Each menu entry is clickable and will open a switchboard popup. Within the switchboard popups, existing switches, items, and functions can be selected and run. Also, the switchboard item can be expanded/collapsed into a simple list view. To complete this functionality, various techniques are used. All those techniques come from the great wonders of Javascript. How It Works: When the menu is loaded, the Javascript calls a function. This function checks the url in the location bar. If the url is a switchboard url, then the function is called again with three new parameters. The parameters will tell the switchboard what kind of menu to show. For example, if the menu has items, switches and functions, then the parameters will tell it to show the switchboard menu and expand all of the available functions. If the menu is a switchboard, then the function will call itself again with four new parameters. The parameters will tell the switchboard to open, and which menu style to use. For example, if we are using a list style, then the fourth parameter will tell it to use a list popup. The extra parameters will also tell the menu which click to use for the menu selections. For example, if the menu has items, the first parameters value is "items" and the second parameters value is "onclick" or "onclick:". If the URL is not a switchboard, then it will call the Switchboard Manager to get the switchboard menu. Installation: Download and install the switchboard. This will include the menu styles, functions, switches, and a css file. If you use ADP, simply install the switchboard into the "Switchboard Manager" folder in the registry and you are ready to go. The switchboard should automatically call itself and place itself in the registry. Simply double-click the switchboard you installed and you will immediately have access to its menu styles, functions, switches, and their onclick values. You can uninstall the switchboard if you do not like it. Support: Visit:
