I've played Prominence twice and enjoyed it both times. This is a solitary exploration, mystery adventure. What I think I liked most about this game was the immersion of the story-telling and puzzles in this game. You wake up alone on a space ship with limited power and resources. Every challenge and puzzle stems from that reality. The story comes from discovering logs, emails and messages between the crew. You learn what happened on the ship by gleaning it from what transpired, not from magic messages seemingly left with the foresight that someone would be coming later. This gives the game a more realistic and suspenseful experience. There are two endings so the player gets to choose their fate.

Mechanics are strictly mouse driven, you don't need to switch back and forth between your mouse and WASD controls. We also get manual saves! I always like that better than playing looking for that autosave signal.

I recommend this game for adventurers who enjoy sci-fi exploration games with little handholding and a good dose of challenge.
